Course Outline/Topics to be Covered

The Information Technology Program provides students with hands-on experience in computer operating systems, software applications, help desk, internet, HTML, XHTML language, hardware and maintenance, networking, forensics, advanced networking, Linux and Network Security. These operating systems include Windows 2000, 2000 Server, 2003 Server, 2003, XP, and Vista. Students will be prepared to support end users and programmers in business environments and have experience operating computers and peripherals. Networked computer environments permit users to share information and equipment through a collection of data communications media and applications software. This will enable students to successfully become employed in various size companies.
